Anomalous charge segregation in kappa-carrageenan/sodium dodecyl sulfate micelles. The effect of micellar size on the charge segregation between monosodium carrageenan (NaCMG) and sodium dodecyl sulfate (SDS) in kappa-carrageenan/SDS mixtures is reported. The charge segregation is reported in terms of the fraction of bound SDS, obtained from a combination of values obtained from electrode potential profiles, conductometric titration, and fluorescence polarization of solvatochromic probe, 1-(8-anilino-naphthalenesulfonic acid) (ANS). The charge segregation decreases from 80% to about 10% as the micelle volume increases from 7 to 18 nm³. No significant change in charge segregation is observed for SDS concentrations up to 0.5 mM and in the presence of Ca²⁺. The decreased charge segregation when the micelle volume is less than approximately 13 nm³ is most likely due to the enhanced binding of the anionic headgroups of the SDS, leading to a decrease in the counterion condensation.
